About the Author

Dr. h.c. Eamon Patrick Clune was born and raised in the quiet suburbs of Westchester County, just north of New York City. From an early age, he developed a deep fascination with language, culture, and the subtle ways in which human beings shape — and are shaped by — the stories they tell.

Over the course of his life, Dr. Clune has lived across a wide geographic arc, calling home not only various regions of the United States — including California, Utah, Montana, Connecticut, and South Carolina — but also Sweden, Estonia, and, most recently, Germany, where he continues to write and reflect. This varied landscape of homes and experiences forms a subtle thread woven through his work: a belief in the interconnectedness of people and the enduring possibility of human transformation.

His writing blends philosophical curiosity with a quiet sense of empathy, often exploring themes of renewal, social evolution, the longing for harmony, and the fragile brilliance of the human spirit. Zarya — his debut novel — emerges from this lifelong contemplation of how humanity may rise toward a gentler future, guided not by fear, but by wisdom, collaboration, and imagination.

Dr. Clune dedicates this work to his youngest daughter, Nollaig Brighid Clune, who teaches English to children in France. Her love of learning and her devotion to guiding young minds have been a continual source of inspiration, and a reminder that the future is shaped one curious reader at a time.
